

Quality Of Life Calculator

As pet parents, we always want the best for our fur babies. As our pet ages, their quality of life can start to decline and it's important to constantly evaluate them to ensure their happiness. As their quality of life deteriorates, it is good to determine when it will be warranted to consider humane euthanasia. For this reason, Veterinary Center of Parker, Inc. has made this quality of life calculator to help you determine if it may be the right time to say goodbye to your beloved pet. This is always a difficult decision, but sometimes the hardest decision can be the best one for our pet.

	Strongly Agree (all the time)	Agree (most of the time)	Neutral (sometimes)	Disagree (occasionally)	Strongly Disagree (never)
Appetite - My pet still eats all of their regular meals and is interested in food.	1	2	3	4	5
Water intake - My pet drinks their regular amount of water on their own.	1	2	3	4	5
Urination - My pet is able to control their urination and does not go inside the house or outside the litter box.	1	2	3	4	5
Defecation - My pet is able to control their defecation and is not having accidents in the house	1	2	3	4	5
Pain - My pet does not appear to be in any pain or discomfort.	1	2	3	4	5
Mobility - My pet is able to move around the house and does not need my help getting on furniture or going outside.	1	2	3	4	5
Personal Happiness - I feel joy taking care of my pet and I'm not overwhelmed performing all of the daily tasks my pet needs.	1	2	3	4	5

A score of 21 or higher indicates your pet's quality of life is declining
